New York, Oct. 14.—George W. Per kins, chairman of the executive com

He hurriedly despatched messengers to a theater which Mrs. Roosevelt attended tonight to give her the news of the attempted assassination so that she would not be shocked at hearing the news read from the stage.

Mr. Perkins assured the colonel's wife of the fact that the despatches agreed that the colonel was not at all seriously wounded and urged her not to be alarmed.

The president was Colonel Roosevelt. The president was in attendance at a banquet which the mayor of the city was giving tonight to the members of his cabinet, 500 navy officials and several distinguished citizens, when the news was communicated to him. It was evident that the report fell upon the president's ears as a great blow. He was in conversation with Mayor Gaynor at the time and after hearing the news he sat silent for some minutes. He declined at first to make any statement, being at first to make any statement, being apparently reluctant to credit the re-port.
